Guangdong Awakening Lion belongs to the South Lion in Chinese Lion Dance. On May 20, 2006, Guangdong Awakening Lion was approved by the State Council and listed in the first batch of national intangible cultural heritage list. The traditional folk culture of Xinglion in Guangdong, which combines martial arts, dance and music, is regarded as a mascot to ward off evil spirits and evade harm. Every festival or major event, there must be a waking lion to boost and flourish, which has been handed down from generation to generation. It is now popular among overseas Chinese in Guangdong, Guangxi and Southeast Asia. Overseas Chinese have the custom of waking up lion dancing. As a member of Guangzhou, we make every effort to carry forward the excellent cultural and artistic tradition of the awakening lion.

The excellent traditional Chinese culture created and continued by the Chinese nation in thousands of years of history is the root and soul of the Chinese nation. Cultural self-confidence based on the inheritance of more than 5000 years of civilization is more basic, wider and deeper self-confidence. In the process of rapid urbanization construction in China, the disappearance of local cultural characteristics is obvious to all. It is the consensus of all circles of society to continue the local context. As a business card of a region or a city, regional non-legacy naturally has the "special" character source of characteristic urban culture. Non-legacy lion culture highlights Guangzhou's local characteristics. Increasing the culture of awakening lion in Guangzhou's urban cultural construction will help to improve the current situation of one aspect of a thousand cities, shape the unique image of the city, and play a great role in forming a unique sense of urban cultural identity. And for the future of Guangdong, Hong Kong and Macao Dawan District urban agglomeration construction left behind a common vein.
